Bukidnon: Myths and Rituals / Carmen Ching Unabia
Philippines : Carmen Ching Unabia, c2000
xviii, 527 p.; ill.; 26cm
971-742-035-1
1. Mythology, Philippines—Bukidnon
2. Bukidnon (Philippines)—Rites and Ceremonies.
3. Ritual.
$ 25.00

[This volume is a collection of myths and rituals in both English and Binukid. They revolve around various themes, but all portray how the Talaandig of Bukidnon deal with their experiences and the world around them as expressed in their batbatonon (prose narratives) and pamuhat (rituals). Thus, these myths, and the rituals associated with them, tell not only of such events that have been crystallized in Bukidnon tradition as the creation of the universe, the great drought and the great deluge., among others, but also about the lifestyles of both ancient and recent generations of the Bukidnon, their dislocations and deprivations as a result of the pressures of modernization (from the Introduction).]

1. Political Anthropology - Southeast

[Political Culture and Ethnicity focuses on the anthropology of politics in Southeast Asia. The study clarifies present situations of local level politics from a social anthropological point of view.]

The Case studies presented in this book are an attempt to examine the variable ways in which global processes of the formation of nation – states draw the peoples of southeast Asia into local politics. Problems discussed here include relations of customary law to national law; processes of resolving conflicts and disputes; questions of land tenure; development policies and local adaptation to them; discourses of political culture; formation of ethnic identity and interethnic relation. These studies will contribute much to the deeper understanding of local politics and political cultures in Southeast Asia.]

[This book is not about feng shui. This is a collection of traditional, indigenous Filipino beliefs about construction. It guides the reader on the choice of a lot... gives some tips on planning... goes through the preparation of building materials... offers advice on when is the most propitious time to break ground... tells what things to look out for during the construction proper...lists some suggestions about landscaping... and finally, discusses the many beliefs about moving into a new house...all in the Philippine setting. It also talks about the nuno sa puno and the spirits who live in balete trees and why they maintain a salt-free diet. It describes the many interesting rituals practiced all over the archipelago for good luck and good fortune.]

[This primer recognizes the importance of the banking sector to the economy. But it contends that the Philippine banking sector fails to serve as an effective financial intermediary because access is limited to only a few.
It provides a description of the Philippine banking sector amid financial liberalization and increasing foreign domination. It shows how the concentration of banking capital in the hands of the elite has intensified the oligopolistic character of the financial system. Labour and development concerns are also substantially discussed.]

[This reference Book is a compendium of essential information on the international migration of Filipinos, and the place of journalism in this inescapable social phenomenon. The book gives its users enough background to understand international migration and package and share stories about it. It covers the history of Philippine migration, the issues and players in the migrant sector, media's coverage of the issues surrounding Overseas Filipino Workers (OFWs) and some examples of media's contributions to the migrant sector's advocacy. Philippine Migration Journalism also compiles a list of the maze of government institutions, NGOs, labor recruiters and other groups that are part of the country's migrant sector and assembles relevant statistics on the international migration of Filipinos linked to indicators of the country's socio-economic development. Media Practitioners, OFWs and NGO advocates will find this handbook useful, especially at this time when the migrant sector has come into its own as a political and Social Force.]

Reflections on One Hundred Years of Cinema in the Philippines : Volume One

[This book fathoms the depths of Philippine Cinema as the author ventures into the largely unknown terrain of the country's history of early cinema. With meticulous scholarship and engaging insights, prizewinning filmmaker and author, Nick Deocampo, investigates the origin and formation of cinema as it became the Filipinos' preeminent entertainment and cultural form.

Cinema's arrival and its difficulties in asserting itself in Hiapanic, then Americanized, Manila until the outbreak of World War II are detailed in this book – the first in five volumes to discuss the development of Philippine Cinema in its journey from colonization to nationalism through the process of indigenization. By bringing back to cinema its Hispanic Past, the author guides his readers to see Spanish influences even as cinema struggles to find its native form. These influences may be seen through a matrix of forces – language, material culture, aesthetics, reception, and ideology.

An invaluable guide to film historians, cinema students, film and media faculty, critics, and film audiences interested to learn about Philippine cinema, this book is a monumental contribution to the continuing efforts to define Filipino film culture. With its 400 pages and 270 photographs and illustrations, the history of Philippine Cinema takes its first steps here.]

[Reality of Aid 2002 is a unique source of data, independent evaluation and comment on what the international community is doing – and needs to do – to end poverty and ensure sustainable development. This eight edition of Reality of Aid looks at the issues of ownership and conditionality. It discusses whether an aid regime based on conditionality is really consistent with the local ownership that is widely acknowledged to be crucial to ensuring real accountability and sustainable poverty reduction. The evidence suggests that while donor policy and rhetoric has shifted, a combination of inertia and political and economic self-interest is impending a real shift in the control of policy and resources from North to South.]

[Backed by thirty years of work in irrigation research and development, policy planning, and implementation in many Asian countries, the author presents a strategic vision for the transformation of high-risk, rainfed agriculture into highly productive, intensive and diversified irrigated agriculture.

Central to the book's thesis is documentary evidence of the superiority of shallow tubewell and low-lift pump irrigation systems vis-à-vis medium-and large-scale gravity irrigation systems, and of unrealized expectations from heavy investments in the construction of the latter, which only serve rice monoculture.

This book outlines a program for a rationalized irrigation policy that includes the development of shallow tube well and low-lift pump irrigation systems and the rehabilitation of existing gravity irrigation systems, while eschewing further investments in new large irrigation infrastructure.

Invaluable reading for experts and laymen alike.]

[Mr. White for the People of Concepcion, especially during the earlier half of the preceding century, was the appellation of a ghost that haunted their public schools. Mr. White now largely forgotten by many people of both the town and province was also the name of the first American teacher of Tarlac, Frank Russell White. Arriving the Tarlac in 1901, Mr. White was to build the first public high school in the Philippines and likewise became the initial Division Superintendent of the Province. In 1909, he was appointed the fourth Director of Education of the Philippines. His policies, especially on vocational and industrial education, were to become the cornerstone of public education in the country.

Spurred by a Ghost story, this simple book traces the beginnings of public education in Tarlac at the onset of the 20th century. Concomitant with the colorful but sad life of Mr. White in the backdrop, it gathers forgotten accounts on the experiences of the early American and Filipino teachers as they planted the seeds of what was to become to ascendant public educational institution of the Philippines. For the forgotten American teachers, also known as the Thomasites, this book shares in the joys of the centennial of their arrival in the country.]

[The three essays in this volume provide an extensive and analytical treatment of the country’s balance of payments and trade experience from the 1870s to the 1930s.

Essays one and three deal primarily with the emergence and growth of the export sector in the Philippines during the said period. Essay one describes the silver standard period, the only period in Philippine economic history in the last one-and-a-half century when there was a sustained secular depreciation of the local currency. Essay two discusses the country’s balance of payments and macroeconomic adjustment under the gold (Exchange) standard while Essay three analyzes the demand and supply factors that contributed to the growth of the country as an export-oriented colonial economy during the American regime.

A concluding chapter offers lessons and insights culled from the Philippine economy during the colonial period in comparison with the present. The contribution of the book lies primarily in its in-depth analysis of some facets of the still under –studied Philippine colonial economic history.]

[The Filipino Revolution caught the Spanish empire and colonial administration by Surprise. Nurturing the belief that the Filipinos loved Spain, or were too politically naive, the Spanish thought that the natives were incapable of launching an uprising. The Revolution motivated the Spanish- from the friars to the bureaucrats to ruminate on the causes of the uprising in the Philippines, then dubbed as the "most peaceful country in the World." In the process, some narratives, both the known and unknown are told and retold. This book attempts to answer some questions such as why some Spanish held on to a far away colony and how they reacted when the colony they cherished was finally lost during the trying days of the fin de siecle, a nostalgic era for most of the Spanish colonials.]

[The American period was one of the rapid changes and preparation for modern statehood amidst growing social and economic challenges. How the Philippines managed during those years from 1898 to 1946 under American rule was a bittersweet experience thus the title of the book Applies and Ampalaya. Though bitter as the Ampalaya can be, it is the bitter experience which provides the most valuable lessons of history as long as they are heeded. The apple, which was an American import, represents American rule, its influences and memories. It could be sweet or sour only after having tasted it. With the help of pictures and illustrations, the book attempts to bring a narrative of how the Filipinos fared during American rule. It tells of the recurring challenges of history and its consequences. It tells of lost opportunities and opportunities that could be gained only by listening to history's lessons.]

[If there is one thing that Agoncillo was passionate about, it is the writing of Philippine history from the "Filipino Point-of-view". As early as the 1940s, he had lectured on the necessity of re-writing our history in such a way as to view it from the Filipino standpoint. He felt that the facts of our history must be reevaluated in order to purge our textbooks of the misconceptions and misrepresentations that have corrupted them for generations. He said that in "reading the books and accounts of the history of the Philippines... by the Spanish missionaries and government officials, one finds the Filipinos submerged in the history of Spain in the Philippines.

If Agoncillo were still alive today, he probably would be pleased to see that current historical writing on the Philippines no longer reflects what he lamented as the pervasive "colonial hang-over" Characteristic of earlier works. In the east two decades historical writing has made tremendous strides both in subject matter, methodology, and perspectives, but much more needs to be done.]

$ 10.00

[Francisco Arcellana, Writer, Poet, Essayist, critic, journalist and teacher, is one of the most important progenitors of the modern Filipino Short story in English. He pioneered the development of the short story as a lyrical prosepoetic form.

This venture spawned the Veronians, a radical group of 13 prewar writers who rebelled against traditional forms and themes in Philippine literature.

Sine then, Arcellana has kept alive the experimental tradition in the short story, and has been most daring in exploring new literary forms to express the sensibility of the Filipino people. A Brilliant craftsman, he has built a body of works that are now an indispensable part of tertiary – level syllabi all over the country.

In Arcellana's view, the pride of fiction is "that it is able to render truth that it is able to represent reality". And his reality in the universe of man, no matter how mundane or sublime. he believes that truth couched in fiction allays man's fears and makes reality bearable. "We dare look borne witout fear of petrification." In his short stoires, Arcellana has borne witness to this vision, exploring the depths of human need and emotion in well-crafted prose.]

[In this delightful compendium on insomnia, 38 fine Filipino writers – mostly young, many of them award-winning, a few writing from Montreal, San Francisco, Paris and Singapore, and all insomniacs – describe their struggles with this affliction in hilarious essays, poems and stories. They also divulge the countless remedies for sleep disorders that they have tried, or simply imagined, with wildly different results; and the things they do when all is lost and insomnia has won the night. The rollicking humor is interspersed with carefully researched, indubitably useful, sometimes astounding nuggets of information like:

10-15 % of the World's population have severe chronic insomnia, and an additional 25-30 % have transient or occasional insomnia.

In the past century, modern life has reduced nightly sleep time by more than 20 %
You are more likely to get insomnia if you are female, over 60, unhealthy, depressed, divorced or widowed.]

In these plays, the author touches, once more, the very heart of what defines the Filipino condition by creating a rich variety of vivid characters drawn from the highest and lowest levels of our society. He molds them with a deep understanding of the nuances of human motivation and flashes them out with a lively, at times ribald, humor.

His Original plots, at once elegantly simple and suffused with inevitable complications, effectively render the inherent drama in our lives through a powerful style that does not blink. And, almost imperceptibly, he imbues each play with a subtle social and political dimension that reflects his mature world view that was formed over a lifetime of important and interesting work in the Philippines and abroad.]

[Leonor Orosa Goquingco was named National Artist for Creative Dance in 1976 for the brilliant pioneering efforts and achievements in "the difficult art of choreography".

Her citation continues: "A questing creative spirit, she transmuted national ethnic forms into the contemporary mod of the interpretative dance.

The Pioneer Filipino choreographer in stylized Philippine ballet theatre for over four decades, she confronted the endless challenge of elevating Philippine dance to high creative art, lifting it to its peak of national artistic development. Indeed, her work are indisputable classics of the dance, and her most important works – Vinta, Trend: Return to Native, Noli Dance Suite, Filipinescas: Philippine Life, Legend and Lore in Dance are among her most vital contribution to the art of Philippine Dance.

In numerous cultural missions spanning the four continents, often at personal sacrifice, she projected her people to the world through a medium widely admired for its originality, nobility, depth and range, poetry and grace.

In these achievements, the country takes pride.]

[Daisy Hontiveros Avellana, actor, director and writer elevated legitimate theater and dramatic arts in the Philippines to a new level of excellence by staging and performing in breakthrough productions of classic Filipino and Foreign plays, as well as by encouraging the establishment of performing groups and the professionalization of Filipino Theater.

As Actor, she regaled Filipino audience with her dramatic powers, essaying sensitively and intelligently the demanding lead roles of William Shakespeare's Desdemona and Lady Macbeth, Eugene O'Neil's Mary Tyrone and Federico Garcia Lorca's Bernarda Alba and Maxwell Anderson's Joan of Arc. Her apotheosis as thespian is as Candida Marasigan in Nick Joaquin's A Portrait of the Artist as Filipino. Daisy Hontiveros Aellana's efforts as actor, director, producer and writer have raised the standards of the Philippine theater that led to the blooming of dramatic arts, and yielded a rich synthesis of classical western and Filipino theater, contributions worthy of permanent remembrance.]

[Jose Monserrat Maceda, Composer, musicologist, teacher and performer, explored deep and wide the musically of the Filipino. Through his avant-garde compositions and erudite papers, he showed his fellowmen and the world the beauty of ethnic rhythms that abound in his beloved land, and by so doing exalted Filipino music to new possibilities.

Maceda embarked on a life-long dedication to the understanding and popularization of Filipino traditional music. His compositions like Ugma-Ugma (1963), Pagsamba (1968) , and Udlot-Ydlot (1975) are monuments to his unflagging commitment to Philippine music. When his music is played, usually performed as a communal ritual, a deep racial memory is reawakened which is a significant event for a people in search of its cultural identity. Maceda's remarkable experimentations have liberated Filipino musical expression from a strictly Eurocentric mold. He is an unstinting beacon in the formation and reaffirmation of a national ethos that embraces Filipino as well as Asian, Worldview.]

[The purpose of this book is to look into the historical background and development of the Philippine Senate from its early beginnings even prior to 1916 to the present. It tries to focus not only on the role of the Senate in the struggle for and the attainment of Philippine independence, but also in the development of the political culture of the Philippines. In tracing the development of the Senate as a political institution, it takes into account its structure, organization, function, and accomplishment or record of work.

The book is also an attempt to analyze the role of the Senate in the planning and formulation of national policies, the democratization of the Filipinos and Philippine politics, and in providing the country a direction towards nation building; even as it shows the function of the Senate as an institution providing the check and balance to the Executive and judicial branches of the government, as well as its relations with the House of Representatives.]

[This book is for all those who believe that there is hope for peace in Mindanao. In a land where violence and destruction are the norm, four communities have boldly arisen from the ashes of war to answer the call of peace. Their peace building efforts are chronicled in this book by men and women who have risked their lives in the war-scarred heartland of central Mindanao. Importance is also given to women and the youth, victims of war, now transformed into agents of change capable of providing leadership in critical areas in Mindanao.]

[The Purpose of this study is to trace the change in the outlook of the Roman Catholic Authorities towards Traditional religion (TR). First the church leaders looked down on indigenous peoples (IPs) , those who practice TR, as pagans and as demonical. But as Roman Catholic theology evolved in the course of history, they now look at "pagans" as partners in inter-religious dialogue. TR, taken here in its generic sense, now should be ranked as equal to the other world religions. The shift of attitude has been from arrogance to respect for TR. Why and how did Catholic attitudes Change? The book tries to answer this and related questions in the context of history.]

[Tracing back the evangelical – industrial worldview of 19th century America as the starting point, the author analyzes the historical roots of the protestants' evasion of politics in contemporary Philippine society. From an appraisal of the American missionary agenda since the victory of Commodore Dewey against Spain in 1898, he discovers one basic reason behind the political acquiescence of many Protestants. The author not only juxtaposes Philipppine Protestantism today with the country's struggle for sovereign nationhood, but also gives a scholarly discourse on the rich potentials of Protestantism for transformative theology and practice.]

[Philosophy of Ancient China surveys chronologically the major philosophers of Ancient China and their works, from the first philosopher Kong Zi to the First August Emperor of the Qin Dynasty.

Dr. Co's main objectives are to give the mainstream and great traditions of Ancient Chinese philosophy, to bring out the special qualities of each Thinker, and to assess to a certain degree his contribution to the development of major philosophical schools. Together with the respective socio - cultural and political background and explications of each Philosopher, are included important excerpts from his works.

Though intended for students and teachers of ancient Chinese philosophy, Philosophy of Ancient China will also be of great interest and value to scholars of History who will find excellent references on the historical and cultural development of China, and to scholars of Literature who will discover in the included anthology a rich sampling of finely written poetic and prose works.]

[Religious Education in context of plurality and Pluralism offers students, teachers and practitioners of Christian education and Religious education a way of conceptualizing education theory. The book looks at Asian religious – cultural plurality and critiques traditional typologies for dealing with it. It focuses on religious pluralism, which includes a commitment to one's faith and openness to other faiths, and highlights the historical, educational, theological, biblical, and cultural based for pluralism. Using "an invitation to the table community" as metaphor for religious education that deals with plurality and pluralism, the book suggests possibilities for relating education theory to other issues such as globalization, fundamentalism and the like.]

[Txt-ing Selves: Cellphones and Philippine modernity explores the impact of mobile phone usage in the Philippines. It utilizes the theoretical concepts of global modernity and complex connectivity to shape and inform the interpretation of data culled from questionnaires, focused group discussions, in-depth interviews, and archival research. It traces as well the origins of the Filipinos' preoccupation with the cellphone and their preference for texting to the chronic lack of modern communicative technologies and their desire to maintain contact with significant others in an unstable, unpredictable, and transforming world.

Just what have been the social consequences of mobile phones in the Philippines? Have they significantly altered social relationships? Have they enabled the creation and projection of new and radical identities? Were they really instrumental in the success of EDSA 2? What sorts of messages are usually transmitted in texting? - this book answers these and other questions.]

[Unauthorized Migration in Southeast Asia comes at a time when the magnitude and persistence of unauthorized or irregular migration in Asia, Particularly in the southeast, has assumed an “intractable” character. Known in popular parlance as illegal migration, the label unjustly focuses on migrants as violators while neglecting the fact that their rights as human beings and as workers could be violated. “Illegal” migration also ignores the roles of other actors, institutions (including governments), policies and processes in the initiation and continuation of the phenomenon. Based on studies in two countries of origin, the Philippines and Indonesia, and two countries of destination, Malaysia and Thailand, the book frames irregular migration as inseparable from legal migration. Through interviews with migrant workers, government officials, employers, non-government organizations, and various intermediaries in the migration to irregular situations at different points and times – from pre-departure processes in the country of origin, to migrants entry in the country of destination, to their insertion in the labour market, and their repatriation to the home country. A lasting and humane solution would rest on regional cooperation and paying due attention to the fundamental causes of migration and the human rights of migrants.]

[Coming Home confronts the twin issues of migration and reintegration. The book deals with the following questions : Are migrant women nearer to their dreams of a better life for themselves and their families? What is the social cost of the feminization of migration? Are migrant women willing and ready to come home? What are the possibilities for their reintegration?

Coming Home : Women, Migration and Reintegration is a result of a year - long action research done by Balikabayani Foundation, Inc. and Atikha Overseas workers and Communities Initiatives, Inc.

The Partnership of Atikha and Balikabayani is geared towards providing support for the eventual return and reintegration of Overseas Filipino Workers (OFWs). It seeks to lay down comprehensive community development programs by utilizing the migrant workers' earnings, and mobilizing local resources government participation. Atikha and Balikabayani also adopt a twin-approach of organizing the OFWs abroad and at the same time, their respective families and communities in the Philippines.]
