This voyage did not take place, and Martre and his companions sailed from Le Havre for Philadelphia in 1783 on the General Washington.[8] In March 1784 Boos traveled with Martre to the island of Providence in the Bahamas, and from there on collecting trips to Guanahani and other islands.[9] In September he left the island group, returning to Charleston in South. The visit lasted from May 1786 to February 1787 during which he was often accompanied by the Scotsman Francis Masson in the Cape Swartland and semi-desert Karoo, collecting live plants, bulbs, seeds, birds, insects and more.
