So Long A Letter

So Long a Letter (French: Une si longue lettre) is a semi-autobiographical epistolary novel originally written in French by the Senegalese writer Mariama Bâ. Its theme is the condition of women in Western African society.

So Long a Letter, Mariama Bâ’s first novel, is literally written as a long letter. As the novel begins, Ramatoulaye Fall is beginning a letter to her lifelong friend Aïssatou Bâ. The occasion for writing is Ramatoulaye’s recent widowhood. As she gives her friend the details of her husband’s death, she recounts the major events in their lives.

The novel is often used in literature classes focusing on women’s roles in post-colonial Africa. It won the first Noma Prize for Publishing in Africa in 1980.

Plot summary

So Long a Letter is written as a series of letters between the main character Ramatoulaye Fall and her best friend Aïssatou following the sudden death of Ramatoulaye’s husband Modou from a heart attack. The letters are written while Ramatoulaye participates in Jeddah, a four month and ten day mourning process that widows of the Muslim Senegalese culture must follow. Through the letters Ramatoulaye describes the emotions that flooded her during the first few days after her husband’s death and speaks in detail about how he lost his life. She then discusses the life that she led with her husband, leading up to when Modou betrayed her by taking a second wife without her knowledge after 30 years of marriage. Ramatoulaye details to Aïssatou how she dealt with this betrayal emotionally and how she grew throughout each event in her life.

Cultural History

Senegal was home to many indigenous peoples during precolonial times. Around the 9th century AD Islamization spread throughout Senegal due to the expansive trade routes throughout Western Africa. Today, roughly 90 percent of Senegalese society follows Muslim religion while the remaining 10 percent follows forms of Christianity or mixed religions. Although many people follow Muslim religion, Arabic culture is not practiced in Senegal nor is Arabic spoken as the language. Much of their legal codes are from translated passages of the Qu’ran. French colonialism came to Senegal in the 1800s and enforced a separation of church and state. However many still abide by the Qu’ran’s laws which shape ideas of gender roles, family life, marriage, and the patrilineal male dominated society.

Themes

So Long a Letter deals with multiple themes, which includes the life of women in Senegal during the 1970s and 1980s, family and community life, Islam and polygamy, and death rituals.

Characters

- Ramatoulaye: The widowed Senegalese woman who, after 30 years of marriage and 12 children, narrates the story of her psychological abandonment by her husband, who takes a second wife. Ramatoulaye physically distances herself from Modou who dies four years after this second marriage. Ramatoulaye turns down two other marriage proposals, including that of Daouda Dieng. She is well educated and teaches at a university. After her husband’s second marriage, she must work a lot, since her husband cuts off family ties and financial support.

- Modou: The husband of Ramatoulaye and of Binetou. He was well educated, handsome, and charming. For his own selfish desires, he marries Binetou and cuts ties with his 12 children and first wife, Ramatoulaye. He later dies of a heart attack.

- Mawdo: Ex-husband of Aïssatou. After being pressured by his mother Nabou, Mawdo follows tradition of polygamy and marries a young girl also named Nabou, who is his first cousin. After his marriage with Nabou, Aïssatou (his first wife) divorces him. He is Modou’s long-time friend and a doctor.

- Aïssatou: Ramatoulaye’s best friend, to whom the letters are addressed. She divorced Mawdo because she did not believe in polygamy; she left him a letter explaining her actions and never returned. She takes care of herself well and bought Ramatoulaye a car, which made life much easier for Ramatoulaye. Her divorce is symbolic because it represents a new life for her. She later leaves Senegal with her four sons and moves to the United States to start over. She succeeds in making a new life for herself.

- Binetou: A young girl around Daba’s age who marries her ‘sugar daddy’ (Modou) because her mother, who was poor, wanted to live the high life and climb the social ladder. Binetou became an outcast who never quite fit in with the younger couples or the mature adults.

- Daouda Dieng: A suitor of Ramatoulaye prior to her marriage with Modou who Proposes to Ramatoulaye after her husband dies, but is turned down.

- Daba: Ramatoulaye’s and Modou’s daughter. She is married and the eldest child. She is disgusted by her father’s choice to take a second wife especially one of her closest friends.

- Aramé, Yacine, and Dieynaba: Known as “the trio.” They are Ramatoulaye’s daughters. They smoke, drink, party, and wear pants instead of ladylike dresses. They represent the next modernized generation after liberation from France.

- Ibrahima Sall: A student of law who impregnates Aïssatou, Ramatoulaye’s daughter. He is tall, respectful, well-dressed, and punctual. Aïssatou is his first and possibly only love, he says. He will marry Aïssatou if Ramatoulaye will allow it.

second wife. She is the niece of Grande Nabou and the first cousin of Mawdo Bâ. Grande Nabou: Mawdo Bâ’s mother, who influences him to marry Little Nabou. She dislikes Aïssatou since she comes from a working-class family and her father is a jewelry maker. Grande Nabou is a princess from a royal family in Senegal and is very conservative in her views and traditions.

“Une si longue lettre” (‘So long a letter’) is a series of letters that the narrator Ramatoulaye writes to her best friend Aissatou. They are both women in t I haven’t read a book in French for many years now. This was a great re-introduction to the language. It’s a short story by the Senegalese writer Mariama Bâ. In our current era of questionable feminism, I can honestly say that Bâ’s book is a true work of feminism. It criticizes polygamy and patriarchy that is encouraged by the wider society. “Une si longue lettre” (‘So long a letter’) Une Si Longue Lettre (French) SERPENT A PLUMES Edition. by Mariama Ba (Author). 4.1 out of 5 stars 9 customer reviews. Une Si Longue Lettre recueille les états d’âme de Ramatoulaye Fall, cinquante ans, tout au long des 40 jours suivant le décès de son époux. 40 jours de réclusion forcée qui l’amènent à analyser ses choix passés et les options qui s’offrent à elle à l’aune de sa trajectoire personnelle et de celle de la société sénégalaise. Avec ma tante Dieynaba et sa fille Oumou (ma cousine, donc) nous avons partagé un de ces moments précieux autour de ce classique de la littérature. En résulte une discussion intergénérationnelle entre femmes aux vécus pluriels, sur la polygamie, sur les r...
