It is much easier to say there are not enough black South Africans on the national rugby team and say it is a conspiracy of the sport and one ethnic group but at the same time investing nothing in sporting facilities for black children. Kids can play sport without boots and uniforms even without food, but they need a ball and a space. Sport is a proxy for total B.S. in South Africa and is often emblematic of the society and its failures, frustrations and undercurrents, but beating the Aussies is always good for the national soul. To paraphrase the great leader, we have met our enemy and he is us. South African citizen, Brandon Huntley, entered Canada on a temporary work visa in 2004, applied for refugee status in 2008 and was granted refugee status in 2009. Huntley claimed that he was being targeted in South Africa because of his skin colour. He said that he no longer felt safe in a country where political parties sang songs that translated to "kill the whites". The politics of who gets to decide how the country works are getting more intense ahead of the State of the Nation Address on June 20. PoliticsLester Kiewit | 2019-06-13 11:44:00.
