"The faculty to think objectively is reason; the emotional attitude behind reason is that of humility." They live under the illusion that they follow their own ideas and inclinations, that they are individualists, that they have arrived at their opinion as the result of their own thinking - and that it just happens that their ideas are the same as this of the majority. (p.11) Erich Fromm, The Art of Loving. Fromm thought that we often misunderstand love for a variety of reasons. First, we see the problem of love as one of being loved rather than one of loving. We try to be richer, more popular, or more attractive instead of learning how to love. Second, we think of love in terms of finding an object to love, rather than of it being a faculty to cultivate. We think it is hard to find someone to love but easy to love, when in fact the opposite is true. (Think of movies where after a long search the lovers finally connect and then the movie ends. But it's the happily ever after that's the hard part...." Thus to experience the depths of life, we should cultivate the art of loving. Share this: Facebook.
