One connection I see between Irving, Hawthorne, and Poe is a tradition of gothic themes and style in early American literature. It makes sense: the American colonists came to a "new" land, facing dangers they could not fully understand. They were in a strange place, with a physical landscape to learn and negotiate, but they also had to confront the native people of the land. It must have been frightening for both the colonists and One connection I see between Irving, Hawthorne, and Poe is a tradition of gothic themes and style in early American literature.
