Moving in together is less problematic when you find a brand new space to share together. If you move into his place, or he moves into yours, you could wind up feeling like someone's encroaching on your territory. That bathroom that used to be yours needs to be rearranged to fit two people, and suddenly you have too much of your own stuff in the pantry with no room for someone else's food. It's easier to meld when you are both bringing in your things and finding new places for them. 3. Don't get a roommate. And say these things before they happen, so your significant other understands what you need from the person you live with. These aren't trivial matters if they're going to bother you, so lay the groundwork for getting along in the future. 6. Don't think of this as a new roommate.
