Although John Donne (duhn) is known chiefly as a lyric poet, the posthumous volume Poems, by J.D., which includes the lyrics, represents only a small part of his literary output. Donne was famous in his own age mainly as a preacher; in fact, he was probably the most popular preacher of an age when preaching held the same fascination for the general public that the cinema has today.Â Full of startling imagery, the sermon takes as its theme the paradox that life is death and death is lifeâ€”although Christâ€™s death delivers humankind from death. When this last sermon of Donneâ€™s was published, Henry King, bishop of Chichester, remarked that â€œas he exceeded others at first so at last he exceeded himself.â€
