Business cycles come in four phases, are usually measured in terms of quarters. Each year, of course, has four quarters, but the cycle doesn't necessarily hit each phase once per year -- it's possible to have a year where every quarter was a contraction, for instance, and the shifts aren't always easy to predict. Each business cycle is hardly ever the same, as consumer spending and other factors contribute to the rise and dip in the final calculation. GDP is basically how much money the country's businesses and industries are thought to be producing. It is related to the business cycle primarily insofar as it is calculated based on where in the business cycle the country finds itself, as well as how the economy is thought to be doing on a more universal level. Calculations.

Viewing of Crime Drama and Authoritarian Aggression: An Investigation of the Relationship between Crime Viewing, Fear, and Aggression. By Reith, Margaret. While the three theories differ about the motivation for watching crime drama, they all suggest the same end effect of heavy crime viewing -- a change in the viewer aggression structure in an authoritarian direction. Gerbner (1976; 1979) maintains that we watch crime dramas as a result of accidental exposure and that consumption of these programs increases viewer fear of becoming a victim of crime. Zillmann suggests that this reality-based fear of crime may be the main cause also of the positive relationship Gerbner proposes of crime viewing to dependence on established authority and acceptance of their use of force.
