Nay, come, let's go together. Exeunt. To Hamlet, the state of affairs (the "time") in Denmark resembles a dislocated shoulder, "out of joint." He sees himself as the physician who will have to operate on the crippled kingdom not just by setting the bones, but also by removing a cancer: King Claudius. The dour Dane mutters these sentiments after encountering his father's ghost. We have seen that he is already plotting the way to "heal" the timeâ"by first pretending to be sick himself [see ANTIC DISPOSITION]. But while he speaks to his companions with resolution, in these remarks which end the first Hamlet doesn't feel really great, he is disappointed because he's just realised that the world is based on appearances. Cfr : Claudius is acting as if he cared for Hamlet II, as if he's deeply affected by his brother's death, Claudius hiring Polonius to spy on Hamlet II without the latter noticing Nevertheless, the then wise Hamlet II saw through his uncle.â Now, I hope I answered rightly, I'm also studying Hamlet, this was a good exercise for me to revise a bit for the next exam session :-)
