Joyce arranged the 15 stories in Dubliners so that they move from childhood to late middle age, progressing through the human life span more or less chronologically. We might ask what advantage the child's-eye view here creates. But he is our voice through the story, and the other characters – with the notable exception of the girl he is infatuated with – are kept at arm's length. There is a simplicity and innocence to his voice, describing what it feels like to experience the pangs of first love, but there is also a knowing voice at work too. Churchill uses the character of Joyce to show the flip side of Thatcherism's effects; that is, to demonstrate that those left behind by individualistic ambition must bear the burdens sloughed off by the wealthy and powerful upper classes. Joyce Quotes in Top Girls. The Top Girls quotes below are all either spoken by Joyce or refer to Joyce. For each quote, you can also see the other characters and themes related to it (each theme is indicated by its own dot and icon, like this one). Like most of Joyce's characters, Little Chandler seemed rather disinterested in changing his life (even if he verbally pronounced otherwise). The characters are static with their sheer lack of desire for progression and for the most part seem to find comfort in the thought that it is their fate; their destiny to live out their lives as it is. According to Joyce himself, his intention was to write a chapter of the moral history of my country and I chose Dublin for the scene because the city seemed to be the centre of paralysis.
