Undergraduates who read sections from Jerome's Against Jovinian or The Fifteen Joys of Marriage are inclined to come away thinking that no one enjoyed or advocated marriage in the Middle Ages. To counteract this Murray wisely includes the wonderful letter of Einhard on the death of his wife and some of the pro-marriage sermons of Bernardino of Siena. Similarly, the section on 'Parents and Children' includes sources for both a 'Happy Childhood' (Jean Froissart) and an 'Unhappy Childhood' (Guibert of Nogent).
