Trade unions are associations of employees. Trade union is "an organization of workers that aims to protect and advance the interests of its members" (BIS, 2009). Their objective is to sustain and enhance the terms and conditions of work for their members. This is done through collective bargaining with employers. Recognition of the trade union by the company is very important for collective bargaining. Trade unions play a vital role in effective communication between management and employees. They provide the support system to ensure that the differences of opinion do not turn into major conflicts. Trade unions play an active role in negotiations between management and workers in times of disagreement.

1. Employment Law entails contracts between employers and employees which are normally controlled by specific legislation. In the UK, certain laws have been enacted regulating the areas of sex discrimination, race relations, disability, health and safety, and employee rights in general. Also, certain aspects of employment contracts are covered by Trade Union and Labour Relations Acts 1992.
2. The law protects disabled persons by making it unlawful to discriminate against such persons in the interviewing and hiring process and regarding the terms of the offer of employment. Employers are required

A trade union is an organization of employees formed for the purpose of securing benefits for the staff. It is an association aiming on maintaining and improving the conditions, personal and working environment of the staff. The trade union takes in count the contractual employees as well as permanent. Thus, the trade union aims to negotiate with employers over compensation, job security, working hours, etc., using their members. In general, a union is there to protect the interests of its members, and may even engage in political support, where legislation adversely affects their members.

5. Trade unions have brought about a great change in the Industrial Business. Instead of working for personal benefits the trade union works for the prosperity of the workers.
