Productivity is one of the key components of every company’s success and competitiveness in the market. Productivity translates directly into cost savings and profitability (Proverbs et al., 1998). A construction contractor stands to gain or lose, depending on how well his company’s productivity responds to competition. Contractors must strive to improve productivity continuously or risk losing important contracts. A company has the ability to increase its competitiveness through enhanced productivity by raising the level of value-added content in products and/or services more rapidly than competitors. The concept of productivity is importantly linked to the quality of input, output, and process. Productivity is also a key to long-term growth (Helander, 1981). Performance management techniques used by organisations can be diverse, with each opting for a framework which suits the size, agility and targets of the team. Here are a range of quality management techniques to manage team performance. Regular performance reviews. Booking in time for regular performance reviews has become more important since the introduction of generations X and Y into workforces. Reviews should ideally strike a balance between both positive and negative feedback, employee KPIs (key performance indicators) which keep the business’s long-term goals in mind and should be as co
