The Blackwell Ghost utilizes a variety of video cameras to capture the footage that makes up the feature film. Most of the footage is captured using two handheld video cameras held by the main protagonist (filmmaker) and his wife. Additional footage is captured via smartphone cameras, surveillance cameras with night vision, and a 16 mm film camera. Since these video cameras require no human intervention to record, footage can be captured during situations where the characters normally wouldn't be holding a video camera. The surveillance cameras effectively fill what otherwise would be a void in the story. Found Footage Purity. The found footage purity is a measure of how accurately a film is portrayed as actual found footage.
