Growth and development in children is nearly always a sequential process. However, negative experiences, such as child abuse or witnessing a traumatic event, can delay the growth and development process. Physical development includes changes to the size and function of the body, the development of motor skills and a change in appearance. Childhood and early adolescence are the major periods of physical development. Cognitive development is the process of learning, reasoning and thinking. Cognitive development occurs primarily during childhood and adolescence. Parents play an important role in this process. Children typically learn more reasoning skills in the home where they are given explanations of abstract ideas. With Special Reference to Developing Economies. Authors: Thirlwall, A.P. Free Preview.
