Torn between Empires: Economy, Society, and Patterns of Political Thought in the Hispanic Caribbean, 1840-1878 is a comparative study of the economy, society, and political culture of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Dominican Republic in the mid-nineteenth century. Martnez-Fernndez discusses changes in each country's balance of power and its relationship to changes in the countries' heritage of insularity, colonialism, and slavery. The book covers the years between 1840, when British consul and abolitionist David Turnbull arrived in Havana, to 1878, when the first Cuban war of independence began. Details about Torn Between Empires: This in-depth, comparative study focuses on the economy, society, and political culture of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Dominican Republic in the middle decades of the nineteenth century. Viewing developments as they relate to the countries' common heritage of insularity, colonialism, and slavery, Luis Martnez-Fernndez points out profound, underlying balance-of-power transformations during a time of ostensibly small change in the region's political status. The general shape of political thought in the postclassical period (221 BCE–1911 CE) followed on the foundations of classical political thought. Scholars have used the term imperial Confucianism to describe the philosophy-cum-state ideology that emerged. In any event, the tension between relying on virtuous rulers, and seeking to provide some sort of objective guidance or institution, clearly continued throughout the imperial period. The Twentieth Century.
