Another was the reduction in piecework. Yet another was the growth in food subsidies (to the extent that food was actually available at the subsidised prices). The elite (senior party officials, senior military and state security officers, large-enterprise managers, senior intellectuals) enjoyed state-provided dachas, relatively good housing, better consumer goods than those available to the rest of the urban population provided at place of work or in special shops (or parts thereof), and access to better quality clinics, hospitals, and holiday resorts. Redor did, however, find that workers in the mining and steel industries were relatively well paid in the state socialist countries. Robert S. Santley, "Peasant Capitalist Industry: Piecework and Enterprise in Southern Mexican Brickyards. Scott Cook," Journal of Anthropological Research 42, no. 1 (Spring, 1986): 92-94. <https://doi.org/10.1086/jar.42.1.3630386>. Piece work (or piecework) is any type of employment in which a worker is paid a fixed piece rate for each unit produced or action performed regardless of time. When paying a worker, employers can use various methods and combinations of methods. Some of the most prevalent methods are: paid a wage by the hour (known as "time work"); paid an annual salary; salary plus commission (common in sales jobs); base salary or hourly wages plus gratuities (common in service industries); salary plus a possible
