Introduction
For centuries animals have worked with and for people. Cattle, goats, sheep, pigs, poultry and other livestock have been an essential part of agriculture and our history as a nation. With the change of agriculture from a way of life to a successful industry, we are losing our agricultural roots. Although we descend from a nation of farmers, few of us can name more than a handful of livestock breeds that are important to our production of food and fiber. The variety of breeds represents genetic diversity: a priceless inheritance from our ancestors. Genetic diversity is an important resource that is necessary for the successful adaptation of our livestock to meet the unpredictable needs of our future.

The American Minor Breeds Conservancy (AMBC) has sponsored an art exhibit, The Art of American Livestock Breeding, to recognize the role of livestock breeds in the success of American livestock production. The exhibit is about the cultural richness of our livestock heritage. The paintings convey America's historic relationship with the land, our pride in breeding excellent livestock, and our love of the natural world. The paintings also serve as a record of the development of a breed and its function, as well as providing documentation of early pedigreed livestock.

This Special Reference Brief (SRB) was developed by the Animal Welfare Information Center, at the National Agricultural Library, to compliment the AMBC art exhibition. Breeds featured in this SRB reflect those represented in the art exhibit. The literature contained within each of the breed categories represent historical information on the selection, characteristics, breeding, and use of these livestock. Current literature on present breeding, function, use and related problems are also included. Several agricultural databases and the current and historical collections of the National Agricultural Library, were utilized to develop this document.

The National Agricultural Library (NAL) is one of the richest and most complete repositories of agricultural information in the world. NAL archives rare books and prints of livestock that are valuable in tracing the history of the development of agricultural practices. The selected readings from the NAL collection will provide extensive background to the reader who wishes to gain further information about the breeds of livestock featured in the AMBC exhibit. All citations that are in the NAL collection will include the NAL call number.

The AMBC is dedicated to the preservation of rare breeds of livestock. For more information, AMBC may be contacted at: P.O. Box 477, Pittsboro, NC 27312 or call 919-542-5704.

The history of development of AI is reviewed, particularly in dairy cattle, in which the impact on genetic improvement and control of venereal diseases have been greatest. Other species briefly included are swine, horses, sheep, goats, dogs, rabbits, poultry, and endangered species. Use of AI in animals is a human invention and more recent. Undocumented tales exist of Arabs obtaining sperm from mated mares belonging to rival groups and using the sperm to inseminate their own mares. It provided a remarkable new system of recording breeding efficiency. Others had argued strongly for using pregnancy diagnosis, but this clearly involved few cows, was performed sporadically, and did not provide for centralized collection and evaluation of data. By continuing to use this site, you consent to the use of cookies. Got it. We value your privacy. Genomic selection is commonly used in livestock and increasingly in plant breeding. Relying on phenotypes and genotypes of a reference population, genomic selection allows performance prediction for young individuals having only genotypes. In addition, the historical effective population size of each breed was also estimated and, in conjunction with ROH, was used to elucidate the demographic history of the six breeds. Results When OC without restriction on the number of selected individuals was applied, loss of variants was minimal and most individuals were selected, which is often unfeasible in practice. Agricultural land used for OTHER AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION. Livestock and landscapes. Sustainability pathways. Why does livestock matter for sustainability? The livestock sector is one of the key drivers of land-use change. Each year, 13 billion hectares of forest area are lost due to land conversion for agricultural uses as pastures or cropland, for both food and livestock feed crop production. This has detrimental effects on regional water availability, soil fertility, biodiversity and climate change. Furthermore, 20 percent of the world grasslands are degraded; this trend is increasing, mai
