We view the political process in China as trading off the social benefits of increased trade and foreign direct investment, against the losses incurred by state-owned enterprises due to such liberalization. A model drawing on Grossman and Helpman (1994, 1996) is used to derive an empirically estimable government objective function. The key structural parameters of this model are estimated using province-level data on foreign direct investment and trade flows in China, over the years 1984-1995. New Trade Theory (NTT) is the economic critique of international free trade from the perspective of increasing returns to scale and the network effect. Some economists have asked whether it might be effective for a nation to shelter infant industries until they had grown to a sufficient size large enough to compete internationally. The monopolistic advantage theory is an approach in international business which explains why firms can compete in foreign settings against indigenous competitors [23] and is frequently associated with the seminal contribution of Stephen Hymer. [24]. One prominent field of application is managerial compensation. Economy of scale [edit]. Main article: Economy of scale.
