College writing often involves integrating information from published sources into your own writing in order to add credibility and authority—this process is essential to research and the production of new knowledge. However, when building on the work of others, you need to be careful not to plagiarize: to steal and pass off (the ideas and words of another) as one's own or to present as new and original an idea or product derived from an existing source.<sup>1</sup> The University of Wisconsin—Madison takes this act of intellectual burglary very seriously and considers. Even if you use your own words, if you obtained the information or ideas you are presenting from a source, you must document the source. Information: If a piece of information isn't common knowledge (see below), you need to provide a source. This practical book thoroughly explains the writing process and covers all the key writing skills.
